	37213	SEC M001	M	12:45PM-03:30PM	Wang	3.0	Class Topic: Privacy Policy, Law, and Tech. Privacy has long been considered as a fundamental human right. Emerging technologies such as social media, smart grid, Internet of Things, drones, and self-driving cars have raised heightened privacy issues. Recent development of regulations such as the European Union's General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR) is also drawing increasing attention from technologists, policy makers, and the media. How to protect people's privacy is a key challenge of our time. This course provides an in-depth look into privacy, privacy laws and self-regulations, privacy-enhancing technologies and mechanisms. Privacy will be examined from historical, philosophical, cultural, legal, economic, behavioral, and technical perspectives. This course is designed primarily for graduate students in a wide range of disciplines such as information science, computer science and engineering, law, business, media studies, economics, politics, and psychology.
